The Arizona Solar Energy Industries Association is getting some new board members as the industry seems to be in a mode of constant change in the state.

Mark Holohan, solar division manager at Wilson Electric in Tempe, and Clint Taylor, CEO at Arizona Solar Concepts, joined the board.

New directors also took the helm at the organization. Joy Butler, the vice president of business and policy development at American Solar Electric Inc., was named president; Ryan Hurley, head of renewable energy policy at Rose Law Group, was named vice president; and Eran Mahrer, the renewable energy director at Arizona Public Service Co., was named secretary; and Jim Combs, founder of Conservation Energy Systems Inc., will continue as treasurer.

Other existing board members include Tom Dyer, senior vice president of governmental affairs for Kyocera Solar in Scottsdale; Bob Lord, a local attorney; and Lee Feliciano, executive vice president of CarbonFree Technology.

The group, a collection of everyone involved in the solar industry from manufacturers and installers to utilities, has been one of the larger voices in the industry promoting solar causes.
